Purkins Delivers Principal Address Graduating Class

Diplomas Awarded To Class of 1930 at the City Hall

LARGE ATTENDANCE

Dr. Don Smith Describes School Situation In This District

Before a large audience who gathered at the city hall auditorium for commencement exercises last night, Duval L. Purkins, a native son, and graduate of 1910 from the local high school, delivered the principal address to the class of 1930. His subject for the class address was "The Age in Which We Live."

Dr. Don Smith, president of the school board, presented the diplomas to the outgoing class. Miss Beryl Henry, superintendent of the local schools, made an interesting talk before the large crowd, and introduced the speaker of the evening.

Miss Winter Cannon, high school student rendered a beautiful violin solo. The Choral club, consisting of several local women, gave several vocal solos.

Mr. Purkins, who is now an attorney at law and a newspaper man at Warren, Ark., recalled his school days in this city, and compared them to those of the present. He gave one of the most interesting and instructive addresses ever delivered before a graduating class of Hope High school, according to many of his listeners who departed after the exercises were completed.

Dr. Smith told of the present condition and situation of the school board, saying that it was deeply in debt, and that a crisis had come which must be met before school starts next term. "Besides being in debt, a new high school is needed in which to take care of the increasing attendance, and something must be done," he asserted.

The following program was rendered:

Processional.

"A Heap O' Livin'." Gulesion; "In Gay Seville." Gibb—Choral Club.

24 Students Are Eligible to U. A.

Judge Wilson Receives Notice of Hempstead County Quota

County Judge John L. Wilson has received notice from the University of Arkansas that 24 Hempstead county students may be appointed to the university this year with free tuition for the four-year course.

The University is a state supported institution maintained by the taxpayers of Arkansas for the benefit of the young people of the state. In addition to the usual literary and classical courses in colleges, it comprises, as a part of its organization, the State College of Agriculture and Engineering, and is the only institution in the state giving complete college courses and degrees in these important industrial subjects. It also has complete courses in law and business administration.

The University has also a College of Education whose graduates receive diplomas entitling them to teach in the public schools for life.

For the young women there are complete courses in domestic science and art. Graduates of these courses are in great demand as teachers and as county agents in canning club and home economics work, and at good salaries.

For admission to the University one must be a graduate of an accredited high school. Those who do not live in towns having high schools may obtain appointments and enter the University Training High School, where they may prepare themselves for the freshman class.

Complete information about the University may be obtained by addressing the Registrar of the University at Fayetteville.

Local Youth Heads College Student Body

Lawrence Martin, of this city, who will be a senior at Henderson State Teachers College, has been elected by the students of that institution as president of the student body.

He was a member of the cast which won second place in the Northwestern University drama tournament at Evanston. He is a member of the state champion senior college football team, and was selected all-state tackle for the past two years.

SHOT FROM AMBUSH

First Report To Police That Woman Was Holdup Victim

ASHTABULA, O., May 30.—(AP)—Sheriff Frank Shelton announced today that he had obtained a signed confession from Trilby Smith, 26, and Mrs. Maude Lowther, 22, to a plot in the slaying of Smith's 28-year-old wife, who wanted her out of their love affair.

Smith confessed to taking his wife to a lonely spot on a roadside south of here last night where Mrs. Lowther was concealed in a clump of bushes, stepped out with a pistol upon their arrival and fired a shot that killed Mrs. Smith, according to a statement the sheriff made today.

According to the confession, Smith drove his wife and their small children to a spot where Mrs. Lowther was hiding. Smith stopped the automobile, Mrs. Lowther stepped from ambush with a .32 calibre pistol and fired a shot into the temple of Mrs. Smith, killing her instantly.

Smith then took the children and his dead wife to a filling station nearby where he called police and told them his wife had been a victim of a holdup gang.

Gold Star Mothers Observe Memorial Day

PARIS, May 30.—(AP)—American Gold Star Mothers in France, who visited the graves of their sons who had fallen in the World War, gave an impressive background today for the most extensive observance of Memorial day ever to be held abroad.

Troops fired volleys of shot in salute to dead soldiers at cemeteries throughout France. Taps were sounded, and other services were held in observance of the day and to honor their lost sons. A feature of the day was a trip to the graves of those who had fallen 11 years ago.

165,000 Persons View Indianapolis Automobile Races

TWO MISHAPS OCCUR

Daredevils Severely Injured When Speeding Car Crashes Into Wall

SPEEDWAY, Indianapolis, Ind., May 30.—(AP)—With a record crowd of 165,000 persons viewing the spectacular Billy Arnold care-free 200-mile automobile race at Indianapolis motor speedway when the 200-mile mark was reached. Arnold reeled off the 200 miles in one hour, 57 minutes and 28 seconds, averaging 102.143 miles per hour.

William (Shorty) Canton, of Detroit, was second, being 2 1-2 miles behind the speeding Arnold, "ouster" Shilts of Indianapolis was third.

Accidents and motor trouble knocked out 17 of the original 38 cars out of the race before the end of the 200 miles.

Two mishaps brought undue nerves to spectators as the daredevil's sped around the 2 1-2 mile track. One smashup caused six cars to collide, but all the drivers escaped death.

A car owned by the favorite, Peter Palo, but driven by Fred Roberts of Danville, Ill., swerved and collided into an automobile piloted by Marion Dexter, of Indianapolis. Five other cars crashed into them.

Cy Marshall, of Indianapolis, and his brother Paul riding with him as mechanic, were severely injured when their speeding car crashed into the wall on the dangerous outside turn, shattering and wrecking the car, over the dropped 25 feet to the ground below.

Arnold had won $7,800 in top prize by receiving $100 for each lap that he led.

Robison Speaks on Melon Festival

General Chairman Addresses Rotary—Washington Quartet Sings

Preliminary plans for the 1930 Watermelon Festival, Thursday, August 7, were discussed by George W. Robison, general chairman, at the luncheon of the Rotary club today in Hotel Barlow.

It was the first statement from Mr. Robison since his election early this week by a special committee of the Chamber of Commerce. He expressed appreciation of the responsibility thrust upon the management of the Fifth Annual Festival, and asked for the co-operation of the entire city and county with the Festival committee.

One suggestion that has been advanced for this year's Festival, Mr. Robison said, is that the parade of floats be discontinued, and greater attention given to the program at the Fair grounds. As this is a campaign year there will be keen interest in public speakers, of whom many are available, he said. This suggestion will be disposed of at a later date, he concluded.

The Washington Quartet was the entertainment feature of the Rotary program today. They sang a number of melodies, all of which were enthusiastically received. Although the quartet is widely known over the county, it was their first appearance before the Rotary club, and the members were delighted.

Frank May led the quartet, the other members of which are: Willie Harris, Les Moses and Paul Rowe.

The quartet was presented by Martin Bates, in charge of today's program. Terrill Corpeus presided over the luncheon in the absence of President E. F. McFaddin and Vice-President George W. Ware.

Smackover Man Is Shot From Ambush

Trivial Quarrel Leads To Slaying of Cecil Day

SMACKOVER, May 30.—Cecil Day, aged 45, employee of the Standard Oil Company, was ambushed and shot to death Thursday by Hays Brown, aged 53, a truck farmer on the Snow Hill road, about four miles north of here. Day was killed with a 16-gauge shotgun loaded with buckshot, one of the heads tearing off the top of the victim's head, another crushing the lower part of his face. He died instantly, still sitting in his car.

It is said that Brown, knowing the time that Day usually went to work, hid in the bushes until Day appeared, then stepped out and killed him at close range. The slayer went to the office of Sheriff A. W. Ellis at Camden and announced that he had killed a man, but declined to give the man's name or any details. Neighbors said that a quarrel of no importance that began several weeks ago led to the murder. The two men had quarreled many times about Day's children going into a truck patch after a ball.

"I'm Not Sorry—I'm Proud!" Says Nation's First Gold Star Mother

GLIDDEN, Iowa, May 30.—With a smile on her lips and an ache in her heart, a gray-haired woman, who was one of the first two of the nation's Gold Star mothers 12 years ago, looks back on war this Memorial Day with the mingled emotions that only a mother can understand.

The smile is one of pride, for her boy died a hero—honored by a nation and hallowed by history as one of the first three American soldiers killed in action in the World War. The ache in her heart is the price that motherhood pays for a martyred son.

But Mrs. Carrie L. Hay—mother of Private Merle D. Hay, 21, of Company F, 16th Infantry, slain Nov. 3, 1917, in the Germans' first raid on American trenches—is of the Spartan sort. "Nothing," she says, "could ever make me feel sorry for Merle, because I am proud. He gave his life for his country. I have another son and if war should come again tomorrow I would proudly let him go."

Her voice was calm, but her eyes were moist.

Private Hay's death is written in history, and with his own blood. So are the deaths of Corporal James B. Gresham, of Evansville, Ind., and Private Thomas F. Enright, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who fell beside him near Bataillon, France, in the foggy dawn of that November morning.

The first Yanks had moved up to the front line only a few days before. There was a barrage and then the Germans came over. There was fierce hand-to-hand fighting in the American trenches, but the line held.

When the invaders withdrew, Hay, Enright and Gresham were dead.

It is impossible to tell which of the three was the first to die, but Private Hay had been shot under the right eye and apparently killed instantly. Enright and Gresham had been stabbed with bayonets.

Mrs. Hay, who still lives on the little farm near here where Merle was reared, tells how she got the news.

"I was fixing a box of Christmas things for my boy—we had to ship them early, you know—when the telephone rang," she relates.

"It was an Omaha newspaper calling. They wanted to know my boy's name and initials. They asked a lot of questions . . . and then they told me."

Mrs. Hay collapsed at the telephone, according to newspaper dispatches at that time, but her husband, D. W. Hay, took up the conversation.

"If my boy has given up his life for his country, I am proud of him," the elder Hay said, slowly.

Young Hay was buried in France, Enright and Gresham beside him. Over their grave the French government erected a monument; a German air raid was in progress at Nancy less than 10 miles away, on the day and at the moment it was dedicated.

Translated into English, the inscription carved on the shaft by the French read:

Here in the soil of Lorraine rest the first American soldiers killed facing the foe, on Nov. 3, 1917: Corporal J. B. Gresham (of Evansville)—Private Thomas Enright (of Pittsburgh)—Private Merle D. Hay (of Glidden). Worthy sons of their great and noble nation, they fought for Right, for Liberty, for Civilization, against German Imperialism, the scourge of mankind. Mrs. Hay is the only surviving mother of the three. Enright's mother died before he enlisted; Gresham's mother passed on a few years ago.

Among her souvenirs that Merle Hay's mother treasures today is a tiny replica of this battlefield monument, presented to her by Ambassador Jusserand, war-time French envoy to the United States.

"Dad and I have all our boy's letters, his identification tag, his watch and trinkets," Mrs. Hay relates. "His

Money and Politics

JOSEPH R. GRUNDY handed the political purists a jolt last Monday when he told the Senate committee investigating his unsuccessful campaign for senator in Pennsylvania that it costs so much to run for national office nowadays that no limit should be set on expenditure.

The May primary election in Pennsylvania cost Grundy three hundred thousand dollars—and he was defeated. Four years earlier William S. Vare spent eight hundred thousand and was elected; but the senate refused to seat him. And now Grundy is investigating Grundy.

The senate will have to develop something more significant than mere figures if it is to justify its continual and harassing interference in state elections. Four years ago it arbitrarily checked the will of the people of Pennsylvania who had elected Vare, and the people of Illinois, who had elected Smith. The senate contributed a little public service by advertising the fact that the utility companies helped finance Smith in Illinois, and that Vare's machine put him over in Pennsylvania. But the voters of both states knew all about this after the primary, yet elected both men in the general election.

It has always been a moot question whether a United States senator is a federal officer, or the highest official of his respective state, serving as its ambassador at Washington. In his former capacity he is subject to censure at the hands of his fellow senators; but as the highest ranking officer of his commonwealth he is responsible to his constituents alone. The last is the State's Rights theory. It is the principle of home rule—and we believe in it.

Returning to the subject of Mr. Grundy—the senate seems to be interested in him chiefly because he spent three hundred thousand dollars. The figure means nothing. The nation is only interested in two things, where the money came from, and how it was spent. If public service corporations contributed it, and it was spent by vote, the senate might be able to give a pale moral reason for lecturing Pennsylvania on the art of politics—though the ability of that commonwealth to absorb a lesson in clean politics is something which we doubt.

Grundig contributed practically all of the money himself. He told the senate he spent it for political advertising, on the radio and in the newspapers; and for speakers who toured the state. "The money has to be spent," he said. "Whatever the cost of educating the people is right."

That's something to smile over. Now that he is defeated we are wondering whether Mr. Grundig, instead of educating Pennsylvania, hasn't been educated himself. He has learned, like other rich men, that money won't always win in politics. Mr. Grundig never mixed much with the common people. He was a cold, aloof industrialist. And when the people got a crack at him they voted for somebody else—one of their own.

When you hear it said that big money will take any election nowadays, remember Grundig. Money helps, of course. But if the man isn't somebody that the people recognize and trust, there is little difference between three hundred thousand and three million in campaign expenditures.

A Bad Practice

WE talked with a man in a South Arkansas town last week, who thought he had done something very smart. Says Editor Curtis Hurley, in the Morrilton Democrat. His mother, some months ago, sold some property and placed the proceeds, $15,000, on time deposit in a bank in that community. At his suggestion, he said the mother had not taken the money out of the community for investment, rather than place it in an eastern utility.

Knowing the South Arkansas citizen as we do, we believe he will be the first to give forth a yelp if the banks in that community continue to cut down on loans to farmers and business men. Yet there is one certain truth: banks cannot make loans, if they do not have sufficient money in the way of deposits from which to make the loans, and at the same time maintain the necessary legal, and business like, cash reserve.

Oftentimes, a community is handicapped because local banks are not in a position to make needed advances to the agricultural, industrial and business interests of the vicinity. Many times, this situation is brought about by the activity of citizens, who because of lack of vision, send their cash money out of the community to reinvestment, rather than place it in local investments or on time deposits in the local banks.

We have recently talked with the country editors from a dozen southern and mid-west states. They report, with hardly a single exception, that their respective communities are suffering because of the outflow of local money to eastern financial centers for investment and stock market manipulation.

Some of these days those who have cash money will wake up to the truth. Not only the community, but they themselves suffer, indirectly at least, when they send money out of town, whether it be for merchandise or for investment.

That "Spring-y" Feeling!

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The good old American conscience, which has caused so much misery, shows no signs of wearing out. For more than a hundred years an average of about $500 annually has been dribbling into the treasury's "conscience fund."

Nearly all those who make any comment on their donations explain that religion has come into their lives and caused them to pay back money of which they claim to have defrauded the government. Of course some of these "conscience fund" contributors don't owe the government anything, and are obviously reveling in artificial ecstasies of atonement.

Six Bills for Pebbles
Here's a typical letter recently addressed to President Hoover, which found its way to the treasury:

"Thanking God for his Saving Grace, I am indebted to the Treasury the sum of 75 cents for pebbles, small stones, acorns and leaves taken as souvenirs while visiting Gettysburg National Cemetery some years ago. God in his love has shown me it was displeasing him. Thanking him who died for me for making it possible to make all things right. Yours in Christ."

Explanations are most likely to come from the smaller contributors. For instance, in come two-cent stamps from somebody who says: "I used stamps from old letters that were not marked. Heaven forgive me!" But the largest contribution which has come in lately—$437 sent to the internal revenue office in New York—was contained in several money orders signed by a name which proved to be fictitious.

The "conscience fund" was born in 1811 when an anonymous person sent the treasury $5, of which he said he had defrauded the government.

It now totals more than $580,000. The term "fund" is a misnomer, however. No real fund was ever established. The money is turned over to the treasurer of the United States and increases the "available balance." It comes under the general supervision of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants.

In only one year were there no "conscience" contributions—1848.

Once a Civil War veteran at Greenville, Ind., sent in $200 because he had stolen a mule from the army. Some years ago a clergyman in the "foreign capital" gave the American consul general $14,225.15 which had been handed to him by a communicant who confessed that he had defrauded the U. S. government.

Another man who had forged a check and thus beaten Uncle Sam out of $300, finally sent in $519.50, which included compound interest. Ten or 15 years ago a veteran of the Civil War sent $5 for a saddle blanket which he had appropriated in 1863. A hundred dollars came in to pay for the duty on an undeclared watch brought in from Europe.

"Enclosed find check for $1 to cover 15 rounds of ammunition I sent home for a souvenir while I was in the service in 1918-19," an Oregon man wrote a few days ago, signing his name. "I have accepted Jesus Christ as my personal savior. He requires that I straighten up all my wrongs as far as possible to do so. Please forgive me and see that the money reaches the right place."

Quick Relief Found by Georgia Lady Who Took Theodor's Black-Draught.

Atlanta, Ga.—"I have been a user of Theodor's Black-Draught for about forty-five years," writes Mrs. Sarah L. Thomas, of 449 Bedford Place, this city. "I wouldn't know how to keep house without it."

"I was subject to headaches and dizzy spells that caused me to spend a day or so at a time in bed, and made me feel weak and shaky."

"My step-mother advised me to take Black-Draught, and finding it so helpful and quick to relieve me, I have used it, when I needed a laxative, ever since. MRS. ALICE BRADLEY

"I don't know what there is in Sargon, but it's the most wonderful medicine I ever took in my life! Today is the first time I've been able to come down town alone in six months and it is due to the wonderful strengthening effects of this remarkable medicine!"

"For months my nerves were upset and I was so rundown that I was unable to do any housework, and hardly able to get out of the house. I was so weak I spent most of my time in bed. My appetite was poor, the lightest foods disagreed with me and I suffered continually with chronic constipation. I am on my fourth bottle of Sargon, my appetite is splendid, my digestion is perfect, I'm strong and energetic, my nerves are strengthened and my housework is really a pleasure. Sargon Pills have rid me of constipation for the first time in years."

"OUT OUR WAY"

America's Most Widely Read Comic

Forty million people can't be wrong! That is the estimated number of readers of that great comic feature, "Out Our Way," by J. R. (Jim) Williams.

It appears in this paper and more than 600 others throughout the country. Surveys have shown that more than 90 per cent of the newspaper readers follow it daily.

Why does this comic have such an appeal? We think the answer will be found at the right.

To Jim Williams, the world is filled with "folks"—not persons. He excels in human interest. With pathos and comedy, humor and tragedy his drawings reflect life as it really is. He can produce a robust chuckle or a wistful smile. His characters—kids or cowboys, mothers or machinists—are unfailingly human.

As Eugene Field or James Whitcomb Riley pictured life in poetry, Jim Williams depicts it on the drawing board.

Every year with dwindling number, loyal still to those that slumber, forth they march to where already many have found peace at last. And they place the fairest blossoms O'er the silent, moldering bosoms Of the valiant friends and comrades of the battles of the past. Every year we see them massing, Every year we watch them passing, Scarcely pausing in our hurry after pleasure, after gain, But the battle flags above them Seem to bend and bless and love them, And through all the lifting music sounds and undertone of pain.

Memorial Day, 1930

Comes now the time when we recall, with bowed heads, tales of courage and sacrifice, accounts of battles won and lost by a nation that has ever upheld the highest ideals of humanity. We place wreaths of homage at warriors graves, and salute heroes who live.

Well as I have been absent for a few days, I'll have again to let you all know that we've had just plenty or rain here. Everybody has plenty of work to do now for a while, but don't know just where to start—land and crops are washed bad in this community and lots of cotton to plant yet. I think the acreage has been cut plenty at present, but we are thankful that it's as well with us as it is for we haven't had any wind or hail yet, and we realize that lots of folks are hurt worse than we are.

Bro. Middlebrooks filled his regular appointment here Saturday and Sunday. He preached a good sermon Sunday to a very attentive but a very small crowd, as the people of this vicinity were scattered. Some went to the home coming at Union, some of the singing convention at

The Husband Hunter

BY RUTH DEWEY GROVES

BEGIN HERE TODAY

NATALIE CONYER, jealous of her husband's friendship with REYNOLDS LAMONT, leaves Alan, wounded, and prevents either from seeking a reconciliation, and Alan turns to his secretary, PHILIPPA, who, for a moment, she plays her hand so cleverly that they soon become engaged.

Her friend, Natalie writes Alan, informing him of her return. Their meeting leaves him hopeful, but Natalie, in her intentions, prevents him from seeking a reconciliation with Natalie, but he really does not want to place in his heart. He goes to Phillipa and asks her to release him. She refuses and makes an effective appeal to his pity.

Natalie's sister, REYNOLDS, with the help of her fiancé, ALAN, takes her to the hotel to bring Alan back to his home. But Phillipa still stands between Alan and Natalie.

Reynolds pleads homecoming, saying they will catch up their differences. Natalie makes a decision and there meets Bernadine, who is seeking Alan's advice in her situation. Natalie's old jealousy comes up again and she quarrels with Alan.

Playing her game, Phillipa invites Alan to her apartment for dinner. The next day Natalie comes to the office to plead for forgiveness, but Alan is out. Phillipa is angry, while Natalie waits in Alan's private office, she realizes that she is not certain that she can ever again love him.

Alan telephones but Phillipa does not tell him that Natalie is there. Natalie leaves her apartment in the mail Phillipa and a letter from Bernadine. She uses it in a plot against Natalie.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

ALAN did not call at Phillipa's apartment that night. She waited up until long past midnight, thinking that he might at least telephone her. She grew feverish with fear that he had gone to Natalie.

She thought about what she would do if he had. She would let the faked order to buy stock for Bernadine go through just the same. There would be trouble. It might be possible to convict Natalie of the guilt even if she had offered a reconciliation with Alan.

When Phillipa reached this point in her summing up of the situation, she became less worried, and soon went to bed—to fall promptly asleep.

Alan was, at that time, up in Hillshire, pacing up and down before his residence, torn between a desire to enter and an equally strong determination to stay out.

He was there because there was no other place where he wanted to be. He was still too angry with Natalie to want Phillipa's sympathy.

He was glad that it was a dark, moonless night, and that his house stood well away from the nearest street light. He did not wish to be observed by friend or neighbor in his foolishness—he called it foolishness.

For relief from the feeling—he could not long keep his eyes away from the house—he stared at the windows of Natalie's room. She was at home—someone was at home.

LEWISVILLE

The Lewisville high school will close on June 6th.

The Senior examinations are being given this week.

The students that were working for a credit in music took their examination Tuesday afternoon.

The commencement address is going to be conducted by J. L. Bond, former state superintendent, and now Superintendent of Schools of Union county.

Rev. W. P. Harman of the Christian church of Hope, is going to give in her room—or she had left the lights burning. The rest of the house was in darkness.

When he saw the light there, he was reassured. He knew he had been afraid that Natalie might have gone back to her parents. And he had been too stubborn to give in to his fear and try to stop her until the idea had driven him desperate.

He walked until he was tired, but he did not leave until he saw the light go out.

NATALIE had pressed the button near the head of her bed, because the light, soft as it was, had grown intolerable. Her temples throbbed like trip hammers and a myriad of pinpoints of dazzling brightness ligged and danced before her burning eyes.

They remained there when the light was out. Natalie knew she was ill. But self-pity found no break in her armor of humble pride. She would ask Alan to forgive her. If he would come to her. She knew she could not go to him; not soon. She would send for him—perhaps she shouldn't wait until morning—but then she didn't know where to find him—unless he had gone back to the hotel where he lived while she was away.

She reached out a hot hand for the extension telephone on a stand by the bed. She was lifting it toward her, when suddenly she put it back. She mustn't send for Alan now. He would think she had used her illness as an appeal to his pity.

But in the morning—in the morning—perhaps he would telephone. She closed her eyes, vainly trying to shut out the torturous pinpoints that pricked at her brain with devilish persistence. Her thoughts grew confused, and she spent the remainder of the night in a mental state that bordered on delirium.

Ethel came the next morning to wake her, and wanted to call a doctor. But Natalie had recovered sufficiently to prevent it, and got up, though the maid had to assist her with her bath. The girl worried over her mistress' apparent weakness, but Natalie thought that a doctor could not help her.

She dressed, and waited, a prayer in her heart that Alan would relent and come to her.

Ethel brought her a light breakfast and Natalie sipped the fruit juice to please her. The rest she left untouched.

Alan, about the same time, was breakfasting just as sparingly, though not tearfully, for he was concerned about his neglected business. He arrived at the office between nine and ten, and immediately called Phillipa into his room.

They first attended to some matters that were more pressing than Bernadine's, and then Phillipa brought it up. There had been no mention of anything other than business made between them.

Alan read the letter and frowned over it. "Funny," she heard him mutter.

"It isn't really a very good stock, is it?" she asked lightly.

"I wouldn't let her touch it without a hot tip," Alan replied, more as though he spoke to himself than addressed to Phillipa.

Phillipa's heart bounded. Apparently he suspected nothing wrong with the letter. She was glad to have it so—to see the order go through—for she always had been a bit resentful of Alan's buying so many presents for little Bobby-Lamont. This would cost Bernadine all of that, and more too.

BUT when Alan looked up at her and asked her to get Bernadine on the telephone, her elation vanished. She tried to intervene. "Do you really think you ought to disturb her so early in the day?" she asked. "You know she has to go to the club even if she is ill."

"I think I'd better talk with her," Alan answered decisively.

Phillipa did not dare say more. Alan was showing good judgment in consulting Bernadine. It would be strange for his secretary to urge him to do otherwise. And what did it matter—except that Bernadine might not lose a goodly sum of money.

Her main object was to fix the crime of tampering with the letter upon Natalie. Alan's telephoning Bernadine now would reveal that it had been tampered with sooner than she had hoped, but Phillipa was satisfied.

Alan had to wait for Bernadine to answer his call. She was asleep and the faithful Nellie would not awaken her suddenly. Her voice was very sleepy when she spoke to him, and perhaps she was too drowsy to think, also she might have noticed that Alan did not mention the name of the stock she had asked him to buy for her.

He merely said "this stock," in a very doubtful tone. "I don't think it's worth the gamble," he added gratuitously.

"It's all right," Bernadine assured him. "You know, I told you, didn't I, who gave me the tip?"

"That's all that kept me from thinking your letter was a joke," Alan replied. "But did you get it straight from him?"

"Yes, and not too late in the evening, either," Bernadine answered. "Well, I hope not," Alan replied. And, "How are you feeling?" he added as an afterthought. "How's Bobby?"

His unflinching interest in her boy pleased Bernadine. She answered happily that Bobby was in perfect health. Alan could not avoid being subconsciously influenced by the free-from-care tones of her voice.

He credited too much her certainty of winning on the market, without realizing that his mention of her young son was more reason-for her cheerful goodbye and gay "see you soon."

PHILIPPA had listened to the conversation, with her heart palpitating up in her throat, waiting for Alan to make the momentous discovery regarding the letter. When he hung up the receiver, she could scarcely credit the fact that it had not yet been made.

He gave her the letter, with his O. K. on it to take out to Mr. Wells, who would put it through the routing of the office.

Phillipa said to herself: "And that's that!"

Several times during the time that intervened between Mr. Wells' receiving the letter and Bernadine's late afternoon visit to the office, Alan looked at the stock-ticker with growing apprehension. Had Bernadine intended to buy on a falling market, or had something gone wrong? He had other details of his business to worry him, but his mind was chiefly on Bernadine's affairs. He knew she could not afford to lose any more money.

When she came in, he was overwhelmingly relieved to see her. Phillipa showed her into his private office without delay, knowing that he was alone. She, not Bernadine, wore an inscrutable smile. The one on Bernadine's countenance was frankly a happy one.

But it changed to an expression of complete dismay a few moments after she entered Alan's presence. He had told her he thought she was a fool to buy that particular stock at that time.

Bernadine listened to him with her eyes growing wider. Alan caught the meaning of her uncomprehending expression. Then it came out. Alan declared, when Bernadine told him the name of the stock she wanted him to buy for her, that she must have been mistaken. He read the letter, he said, several times. He couldn't have made such an error.

He said it with increasing consternation, his hand on the bell that summoned Phillipa to his room. Bernadine's insistence that she had not made a mistake, reiterated over and over, was intolerably convincing.

"Miss West, please get me Mrs. Lamont's latest letter," he snapped at Phillipa, when she came in.

"The one I took to Mr. Wilson this morning?" she asked anxiously.

Alan glared at her. "Yes, of course," he answered impatiently. Phillipa knew she was exasperating him and it delighted her. She felt she owed him many uneasy moments. She went out with a deliberation that made Alan want to shout after her to hurry.

Instead, he turned to Bernadine. "We'll see in just a moment," he said, "but I'm sure I'm right."

"It's terrible," Bernadine cried; "but Alan, I know you're not!"
